

GATHERED SHOULDER

- An easy shoulder style to wear and makes for a perfect “beginner’s sling”.
- The fabric opens up wide to cup the whole shoulder and top of the arm. The wearer can spread or gather up the fabric as they prefer.
- Especially good for larger frames or rounded shoulders as it will prevent the fabric popping up to the wearer’s neck.
- Not recommended for petite frames or narrow shoulders as the wide style may swamp a smaller wearer and restrict movement of the arm.

PLEATED SHOULDER

- Another easy shoulder style to wear.
- The first row of embroidery/stitching sets the shoulder width at approximately 6”, so the fabric cannot travel too far down the arm. The pleats then open up wide to spread the fabric nicely over the wearer’s back.
- Can be worn on all shoulder shapes but particularly good for narrow and/or sloping shoulders.
- As with all Ring Slings, it is important to wear the fabric against the ball of the shoulder, not against the neck.

PADDED BOX PLEAT SHOULDER

- A padded 6” wide box pleat. The padding sits on the ball of the shoulder and the flaps are spread out to cup the shoulder and fix it in place. (A good choice if you don’t like the fabric touching your neck).
- The padding makes carrying heavier babies, (8m+), much more comfortable.
- The narrower style works best on square shoulders, narrow shoulders and/or petite frames.
- Not especially recommended for sloping or rounded shoulders as it can slip up towards the neck.
